this book deals with consumer lending from both theoretical and empirical points of view in the theoretical section it book analyses the wider context of financial literacy household indebtedness and the global consumer credit market including relevant legal regulatory and risk management issues in the empirical section the book uses the navigator of responsible lending as an evaluation tool to assess both bank and non bank consumer credit providers in the czech republic although our empirical research is done as a case study on the czech republic its basic ideas might be easily applied to other countries as well enclosures to the book include additional texts relevant to consumer lending including case studies and an unofficial english translation of the czech consumer credit act and therefore provide the reader with several perspectives on the topic at the beginning of the 20th century consumer credit in the united states was perceived as unfair and exploitative social reformers fought to limit the economic and social impact of small lenders they decried as loan sharks reputable businesses steered clear of sales credit because of the questionable consumers that it would attract by the 1970s however credit in america had been reimagined as a legitimate tool of household finance that was understood to have broad social and economic benefits this transformation in the moral economy of credit accompanied a revolution in lending technologies and the regulatory treatment of consumer credit ultimately these changes allowed american households to amass unprecedented debt debt that eventually precipitated the worst financial crisis of postwar america to understand the origins of that crisis we need to understand not just the shifting habits of consumers but also what happened to lenders as the public moved from opposing credit to embracing it this book traces how that transformation occurred nearly all accounts of the origins of american consumer credit have focused exclusively on the u s experience single country case studies have their virtues but they do not allow the observer easily to differentiate what is unusual about the u s case from what is common even to countries with very different credit practices managing a consumer lending business 2nd edition summarizes the lore and knowledge of the business in the early 21st century it covers many subjects a good manager should know the importance of how to attract enough good accounts to offset the inevitable bad accounts that every lender will get controlling line sizes encouraging use by good customers controlling the use by bad customers managing profitability with predictability if he or she is to effectively run a high volume consumer business the second edition covers some of the problems the financial services industry experienced in the early 2000s and some of the resulting regulations implemented the updated mis demonstrates and compares this later period to earlier results for the industry consumer credit and the american economy examines the economics behavioral science sociology history institutions law and regulation of consumer credit in the united states after discussing the origins and various kinds of consumer credit available in today s marketplace this book reviews at some length the long run growth of consumer credit to explore the widely held belief that somehow consumer credit has risen too fast for too long it then turns to demand and supply with chapters discussing neoclassical theories of demand new behavioral economics and evidence on production costs and why consumer credit might seem expensive compared to some other kinds of credit like government finance this discussion includes review of the economics of risk management and funding sources as well discussion of the economic theory of why some people might be limited in their credit search the phenomenon of credit rationing this examination includes review of issues of risk management through mathematical methods of borrower screening known as credit scoring and financial market sources of funding for offerings of consumer credit the book then discusses technological change in credit granting it examines how modern automated information systems called credit reporting agencies or more popularly credit bureaus reduce the costs of information acquisition and permit greater credit availability at less cost this discussion is followed by examination of the logical offspring of technology the ubiquitous credit card that permits consumers access to both payments and credit services worldwide virtually instantly after a chapter on institutions that have arisen to supply credit to individuals for whom mainstream credit is often unavailable including payday loans and other small dollar sources of loans discussion turns to legal structure and the regulation of consumer credit there are separate chapters on the theories behind the two main thrusts of federal regulation to this point fairness for all and financial disclosure following these chapters there is another on state regulation that has long focused on marketplace access and pricing before a final concluding chapter another chapter focuses on two noncredit marketplace products that are closely related to credit the first of them debt protection including credit insurance and other forms of credit protection is economically a complement the second product consumer leasing is a substitute for credit use in many situations especially involving acquisition of automobiles this chapter is followed by a full review of consumer bankruptcy what happens in the worst of cases when consumers find themselves unable to repay their loans because of the importance of consumer credit in consumers financial affairs the intended audience includes anyone interested in these issues not only specialists who spend much of their time focused on them for this reason the authors have carefully avoided academic jargon and the mathematics that is the modern language of economics it also examines the psychological sociological historical and especially legal traditions that go into fully understanding what has led to the demand for consumer credit and to what the markets and institutions that provide these products have become today the use of credit scoring the quantitative and statistical techniques to assess the credit risks involved in lending to consumers has been one of the most successful if unsung applications of mathematics in business for the last fifty years now with lenders changing their objectives from minimising defaults to maximising profits the saturation of the consumer credit market allowing borrowers to be more discriminating in their choice of which loans mortgages and credit cards to use and the basel accord banking regulations raising the profile of credit scoring within banks there are a number of challenges that require new models that use credit scores as inputs and extensions of the ideas in credit scoring this book reviews the current methodology and measures used in credit scoring and then looks at the models that can be used to address these new challenges the first chapter describes what a credit score is and how a scorecard is built which gives credit scores and models how the score is used in the lending decision the second chapter describes the different ways the quality of a scorecard can be measured and points out how some of these measure the discrimination of the score some the probability prediction of the score and some the categorical predictions that are made using the score the remaining three chapters address how to use risk and response scoring to model the new problems in consumer lending chapter three looks at models that assist in deciding how to vary the loan terms made to different potential borrowers depending on their individual characteristics risk based pricing is the most common approach being introduced chapter four describes how one can use markov chains and survival analysis to model the dynamics of a borrower's repayment and ordering behaviour these models allow one to make decisions that maximise the profitability of the borrower to the lender and can be considered as part of a customer relationship management strategy the last chapter looks at how the new banking regulations in the basel accord apply to consumer lending it develops models that show how they will change the operating decisions used in consumer lending and how their need for stress testing requires the development of new models to assess the credit risk of portfolios of consumer loans rather than a models of the credit risks of individual loans this book explains how financial institutions such as banks and finance houses manage their portfolios of credit cards loans mortgages and other types of retail credit agreements the second edition has been substantially updated with new chapters on capital requirements basel ii scorecard and portfolio monitoring master's thesis from the year 2022 in the subject economics finance grade 1.0 karlsruhe institute of technology kit department of finance and banking language english abstract this master thesis investigates the influencing factors on consumers willingness to share their personal and financial information through open banking technology in different financing and lending scenarios e-commerce car financing and mortgage to achieve this a survey based empirical study was conducted covering a variety of questions regarding demographic factors as well as measured preferences and stances along the dimensions of tech savviness open banking knowledge privacy concerns and financial literacy the analysis of over 143 survey responses shows how these factors influence and explain to what extent and under which conditions a consumer is willing to let a company digitally take a direct look into his bank account the gained results and insights provide a basis to define best practices and use cases for scenarios in which open banking technology can add value to all parties involved since january 12th 2016 the eu's second payment services directive psd2 has been in force a key point within the psd2 is the obligation of banks to make the information of their customers and their associated bank accounts available to third parties via standardized interfaces a concept that is widely referred to as open banking one major field of application of open banking technology lies within consumer credit application processes the main idea is that lenders financial institutions as well as non-financial retail companies can get access to the information contained in bank accounts such as transaction history and balances by explicit consent of the consumer the purpose of this is to make more informed decisions as to whether or not to extend credit to the specific person in scope after a long period of prosperity and steady economic growth the world's leading economies are now in crisis and although there will be debate about its origins the scale and seriousness of the crisis is in no doubt there is also no doubt that excessive amounts of consumer credit allied to a weak understanding of how globalised credit markets might react to a crisis have played a significant part this book which is primarily about credit debt and the trouble they have led to is written by authors who have specialised in researching into over indebtedness that is situations in which an individual's debt burden has become overwhelming for these authors the plight of individuals is a primary concern but the wider issue is how credit is used and how it changes societies the essays in this volume addressing topics which are fundamental to our understanding of the current crisis range widely across the whole sector of consumer finance including mortgages credit binges the regulation of consumer lending insolvency repayment plans debt counselling and much more besides the conclusions drawn from the book are equally wide ranging but above all the lesson learned from these essays is that the financialisation of contemporary life ensures that issues of the appropriate role of credit remain of critical importance in society
